Leads In State Field Test

According to bulletin No. 440 on Illinois Corn performances for 1937, which has just been released by the University of Illinois, lowwealth AQ Hybrid Corn leads all other varieties of Hybrids in the State. The test was conducted in the North and North Central part of Illinois. This AQ Hybrid Corn placed first in general performance in these tests, because of its high yield, erect plant, and strong condition of the corn at time of harvest. Lowwealth AQ Hybrid is strictly a draught resistance corn, which accounts largely for its performance in these tests.

For those interested in these comparison tests on Hybrid Corn, the Lake-Cook Farm Supply Company suggests you contact the Farm Bureau or write direct to the University of Illinois for Bulletin No. 440 on Corn Tests.

Lowwealth AQ Hybrid Seed Corn is produced by the Michael-Leonard Seed Company of Chicago and distributed locally by the Lake-Cook Farm Supply Company.

May Reduce Auto License Fees

Intention of recommending further and more substantial reductions of motor vehicle fees to the next regular session of the legislature and to the Governor was announced today by Secretary of State Edward J. Hughes when he released the figures of total collections in the 102 counties for 1937.

Increases which totalled $1,975,519 over the 1936 fees for the State show in the figures. The fees for the State were $20,861,020 with Cook County alone paying $9,745,116 or $155,116 in excess of the amount necessary for the payment of both principal and interest on the 60 million and 100 million dollar Highway bond issues.

The retirement of these highway bonds is the original purpose of the act relating to the disposition of registration fees and this in addition to the fact that fees increase each year in totality reveals the feasibility of further reducing the fees without throwing the finances

JACK LONEY goes to aviation school

This picture was taken at Walla Walla, where Jack took early lessons to convince his parents of his aptitude. Nearly half of Ryan's flight students have had previous training, but only 40 per cent of the 125 enrollment want to be actual aviators.

Typical of the average student pilot, 21-year-old Jack Loney of Walla Walla, Washington, is attending Ryan school of aeronautics at San Diego, Calif., training for a full time career in the country's newest and most fascinating major industry. FOTO-FEATURE presents Jack Loney as a representative young man in aviation, although, unlike most fellow students, he does not come from the middle west. "John Pilot" is 21, three years out of high school, from a midwestern community of 20,000, and financially aided by his parents who have not encouraged his flying but have consented to it. "John" has been interested in airplanes several years, but decided on his career in aviation only a few months ago. He arrives at San Diego by bus, registers, then begins the one-year course of instruction. The story of "John Pilot," in the person of Jack Loney, starts at the left.

Registering at Ryan school for one year's training in transport pilot work, Jack tells Earl D. Prudden, vice president, how he so-loed in Walla Walla after only three hours and 25 minutes in the air. He will be reprimanded.

School begins as Instructor Verne Murdock gives Jack a parachute. Five days a week will be spent at Lindbergh field, home of Ryan school. There is a definite curriculum, rigid as that of any school.

Time for the first solo! Jack and a fellow student match coins to see who goes up first. The onlooker is Russell Stevenson of Chicago. Of each eight-hour day, 30 minutes to an hour is spent in the air, the rest in class or shop.

Jack takes off on his first solo. Note there is no instructor in the front cockpit. Many a former grocery clerk, musician, truck driver, gas station attendant or "soda jerk" has experienced this amazing thrill. About half of Ryan's students come direct from employment, the remainder from high schools or colleges.

"Brain work" enters the picture. Jack discusses a rigging problem with Virgil McKinley, instructor. Ryan school, founded and managed by able T. Claude Ryan, is the oldest government-approved school in America.

Airplane and engine maintenance procedure is part of the course. Jack Loney is at work with a wing rib here learning about the machine he flies.

Like most students, Jack lives in a private San Diego home for $35 a month. Here he is "hangar-flying" with his room mates over the dinner table. Day is done, and like all other working people, the Ryan students gossip about their experiences, discuss their high hopes for the future of American aviation.

FOTO-FEATURE

Jack and Instructor Murdock take off in a Ryan S-T sport training plane. Loney must take several hours of additional instruction before being allowed to fly alone, despite his previous solo experience. Barnstorming Tex Rankin gave Jack his first ride 10 years ago at Walla Walla, when the Senior Mr. Loney took his youngster up for a thrill.

The Drawbacks

"Dear Mrs. Pucket," a school teacher wrote to the mother of a pupil, "William was absent this morning. Will you please tell me what kept him out of school?" "Dear Ma'am," was the reply. "William is keeping time for his father. Last nite he cum home with an exampel about how long would it take a man walking 3 miles an hour to walk two and a half times around a field 4 miles square. And as Willie ain't no man, we had to send his pap."

All it usually costs to relieve the misery of a cold today—is 3¢ to 5¢—relief for the period of your cold 15¢ to 25¢. Hence no family need neglect even minor head colds.

Here is what to do: Take two BAYER tablets when you feel a cold coming on—with a full glass of water. Then repeat, if necessary, according to directions in each package. Relief comes rapidly.

New Worlds to Conquer

Jack Loney follows illustrious tradition at Ryan school. T. Claude Ryan started the first year-round passenger line between San Diego and Los Angeles. Later he built the "Spirit of St. Louis" for Col. Charles A. Lindbergh. Hoping to become equally talented in his chosen profession, Jack Loney will complete 200 hours of flying time at Ryan school. Then he will probably become a flight officer with the National Guard and continue to pile up flying hours until his experience justifies the airlines' taking him on as a full-time captain or first officer. Aviation, still in its infancy, offers Jack Loney new worlds to conquer. First, he must earn his wings.

PICKING OFF THE SPARES—by SIXTA

"Chuck" Collier, one of the nation's best known veteran bowlers, scored his 27 consecutive strikes in an endurance match.
Collier bowled alone against a five-man team. His name appeared five times opposite the names of his opponents on the scoresheet and his scoring was frame for frame against each of the quintet.
His 27 consecutive strikes, therefore, were chalked up vertically instead of horizontally, filling the first five frames on each line with strikes, plus two extra. But none of his line totals added up to the perfect 300. P. S. He won the match.

BASKET BALL NEWS

Monday night at the Tinley Park gym the results of the basketball game were reversed from the previous meetings of the Orland Park
Heavies" and "Brennan Gables
Light" against the New Lenox
Heavies and Lights.

In the previous meeting, the Orland Heavies won and Brennan Gables Lights lost. Monday the Bren-nan's won and the Orland Heavies, lost. In the Brennan game, the score was 30 to 27.

This game featured some of the fastest passing seen on the floor. At the halfway mark, the score was 19 to 11 for the Brennans. In the last half, New Lenox scored 16 points to Brennans 11, but the spurt wasn't quite enough to pull them in front.

High point man for Brennan's was, H. Uthe, with 10 points, Cleveland following with 6 points.

For New Lenox, Fitzer played the stellar role of the evening with 17 points, Cole following with 5 points.

In the heavy weight game, New Lenox won 32 to 25. The play started rough but after a while settled down to some real basket ball and at the half New Lenox led 17 to 14.

The Orland boys couldn't get going in the second half and were finally subdued but not until they made a good fight. For Orland,
Steinhagen 10 points was high man
John Heims and Hallinan following with 5 points each. For New Lenox, Oram with 15 points led the scoring.
Walsh was next with 9 points.

Orland girls it can be said they are always in there giving their best, and great credit is due them.

Selection of Hybrid Seed Corn For Silage

Many farmers are of the opinion that corn of a longer growing season, such as a southern strain, is better suited for silage, basing their judgment on the increase of bulk in the silo that the southern type corn affords. They overlook the fact that what they really should be interested in is the highest feed value per acre of the ensilage, either for the production of milk or for making growth gains in young stock or feeders and that no one is awarding any prizes for silage bulk.

It is a fact that high yielding corn when grown and ensilage at the proper stage of maturity gives us about the highest feed value per acre either as milk or growing cattle gains. The harvesting of corn for silage is the hardest on soil because it removes from the soil nearly all of the stalk growth which if returned to the soil has a beneficial soil effect. This is not an argument against the feeding of corn as ensilage but a warning that the soil is entitled to some compensating addition or treatment when in the rotation a silage crop is removed from.

We must somehow provide the carbon in the form of cellulose that soil bacteria need for their sustenance and energy and upon which we depend for not only making plant food available but also when plants are not growing for the conversion of the soluble soil nutrients in the soil into the insoluble form of humus to avoid their loss through leaching.

The corn that gets ripe within the season in a particular region or on a particular field is the corn that if ensiled at the right stage will produce the most beef gains or milk per acre. A strain of corn that will mature an apparently near ripe ear with a green stalk will, when properly ensiled with thorough packing in the silo, produce the most gains in beef or milk.

Readers will recall that we pointed out the particular advantage of making silage of some strains of hybrid seed that were adapted to this regions in our columns of last fall and those that preserved copies of this paper can turn back now and read with more interest that articles on the selection of hybrid seed for silage.

The custom is very general that we plant our crib corn first and silage corn last on the theory, of course, that if the silage portion is unable to reach maturity before frost it will at least reach a good ensiling stage and this seems good reason. However, the further custom of planting a southern strain of corn on the belief that it will make more volume in the silo and, therefore, more feed per acre is a mistaken notion as to feed value. Although it does make more volume it will make less beef gains and milk per acre than corn that will practically mature within the region even though the latter has less bulk.

When making silage of immature corn we leave much valuable plant food material in the roots which is only translocated to the ear on the closing stages of maturing, whereas if we allow the corn to mature this movement of the reserves from the root to the ear is largely accomplished before cutting.

It is true that when ensiling the more matured corn we have to pack in the silo, whereas wet, sloppy, immature corn silage will pack itself. This labor saving is a small compensation for the untranslocated losses of feeding value which on too early cutting is left and abandoned in the roots in the field.

The reason why we have to pack the more matured corn is that molds attack where oxygen is available. Where the silage is wet or sloppy its weight compresses until all voids are filled with sap moisture displacing air, but on the more matured higher feed corn we do not have this displacing liquid. Consequently we must exclude air with close packing.

Where we plant our silage acreage after planting the crib corn acreage, we would like to give it all of the advantage possible to enable it to catch up to the earlier planted corn. We recall that in the recent columns we pointed out that more rapid infant corn seedling growth can be had with seed kernels that are so shaped that they have less surface per unit of kernel weight or in proportion to kernel weight. We get this with the more rounded shapes of kernels than with the strictly flat. More plant food with less surface for disease attack; hence, more of the energy of the seedling can be applied to growth instead of disease resistance. Therefore, more rapid growth.

Many farmers planning silo acreage drill their silo corn and do not plan to control weeds with cross cultivation but on the other hand aim to suppress weed growth by early cultivation of the seedlings and covering up as much of the weeds as possible. With rapid growing seedlings we are able to thus cultivate earlier and get a better chance of weed suppression, which is so highly desirable in drilled corn. Further, in drilling we get a very good uniformity of distribution with the more rounded kernels and thus we can accelerate the growth of the silo corn to in quite a measure catch up with the previously planted crib corn. The same thought applies to re-planting following the ravages of cut worms or grubs. In 1937 there were many attacks on corn seedlings. Crows and pigeons removed the seed from the soil. Mice along the borders made ravages. Cut worms and army worms made their appearance here and there so that quite a few had to fill in by hand. The use of the plump, round kernel comes in very handy to obtain the quick growing seedling that is not so much out of proportion with its neighboring plants.

Last September those that drove along the Lincoln Highway west of the intersection of the Lincoln with U. S. 45 will recall the mature looking ears on apparently green stalks in the Thomson Hybrid seed corn fields that bordered on the highway. This was an illustration of advanced translocation of the root reserves to the ear with sufficient green leaves on the stalk and high sugar cell sap within the stalk that would give that combination in the silo of the high feed value ear portion with sufficient fermentable substance in leaves and stalks to preserve and, if possible, beef and milk gains per acre of corn growth. It illustrated how a hybrid corn could be selected that would fulfill the requirements of the best silo corn and even if our silo corn has to be planted after the crib corn we can with seed shape selection accelerate its early growth in order to reach the desired maturing point before killing freezes lower its silage qualities.

Some readers will ask how about planter plates. We will get at that subject in our next weeks issue.

Prodigies in Musical World

There are probably more prodigies in the musical world, and more that succeed, than in any other field. Most of the great composers were prodigies—Handel, Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven, for example. Franz Schubert had composed a symphony before he left school.

A Program From the People

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

News dispatches have recently described a wave of disappointment which swept over some of the spenders and theorists at Washington when a conference of "little business men" resolutely opposed many of their odd and costly experiments.

"Federal spending should be curtailed because the present rate of outlay is greater than the ability of the people to meet," read, for example, a resolution from a sub-committee of that conference.

"Unwarranted and malicious attacks" on business were opposed, along with certain forms of wage and hour legislation.

In one resolution the government was asked "to light some place and maintain a constant perch, rather than flit about like a canary." Others read:

"We believe that fundamental conditions are sound and that business will prosper and unemployment will be relieved if business is relieved from the fear of further undue government interference."

"We propose that employer and employee alike be held responsible for the faithful observance of mutual labor agreements."

"We propose that government should co-operate with and not compete with business."

There were more in much the same vein. Many were changed in wording, but not in ideas, in the final reports. But these points—economy in government and sincere efforts to achieve a balanced budget; modification of the tax burden imposed on the average citizen; efforts to encourage, rather than discourage private enterprise and production; reduction of government competition with business, and peace in the labor field—remained the high lights among the proposals. As such, they constitute a sort of people's program for steps which would help solve the growing problem of unemployment and re-route America along the road to progress and recovery.

Washington asked for and received these suggestions. They chart a practical course to follow.

If the men who now hold the reins of power at the Capitol really want to restore the confidence on which recovery depends, the way seems clear. It consists in giving constructive attention to the reasonable and logical requests which continue to emanate from the people themselves.

That after all is the method—and the strength—of representative government.

You know Finney—Finney of the Force—whose comical adventures are portrayed for readers of this paper by Ted O'Loughlin, brilliant young artist.

This genial copper gets a lot of fun out of the things that happen day by day as he travels his beat, and the fun is passed on to you as you read of his activities.

Safetygrams

BY FRED W. DRAUN
The Safety Man

Every school in the nation should have a safety program. It makes no difference whether the school is located in the country or in the city, it should have a school police and school patrol operated and governed by the students themselves. Public officials should take an active part in such a program by sponsoring it and organizing it for the children.

Schools in many communities now have safety patrols and are finding them very effective in solving the traffic problems in the school zone. Children are taking great interest in them. Such training is very necessary, since we all know that it isn't always the driver of the car who is to blame for an accident. Children must be taught safe practices and safe conduct.

SEEKING GOLD

A lonely prospector, seeking gold high up in the Sierra Madre Mountains, has just written to Dr. Walter A. Maier, coast to coast, Lutheran Hour Radio speaker, promising his first 'take' as a thank offering. A small portable radio had brought the Gospel to his isolated camp, miles from any church.

Dr. Maier, who receives almost 2,000 letters from his listeners in a day, said he frequently hears from persons of many denominations living in isolated places where they cannot attend church. Forest rangers and fire wardens are among his frequent long-distance correspondents, while sailors 2,000 miles out on the Pacific have written to express their thanks for the Gospel.

Prison inmates and hospital "shut ins" write at regular intervals according to Dr. Maier, whose messages are based on the complete acceptance of the Deity of Christ and a practical adherence to the whole Scriptures. Intended principally to bring the Gospel to America's unchurched millions, the Lutheran Hour numbers in its audience many of other denominations, both Protestant and Catholic, and their letters of commendations often contain contributions toward the expenses of the broadcasts.

Prisoned For Stealing Electricity

For the first time in Illinois a man was sent to the penitentiary for the theft of electricity when Judge Robert J. Dunne in Criminal Court in Chicago sentenced Gust Menagas, a Chicago restaurant owner to from 1 to 10 years on a charge of grand larceny. Evidence showed that Menagas had stolen $3200 worth of electricity by diverting current around the meter.

The state was able to gain its first conviction for stealing electricity as the result of a ruling of the State Supreme Court that electricity is personal property and its theft a crime. Before this, courts had considered electricity was not a sufficiently "tangible" nature to be stolen, and prosecution could be based only on charges of tampering with an electric meter, which is a misdemeanor.

Menagas was indicted a year ago but was freed when a motion to squash the indictment was sustained on the grounds that electricity was not tangible and could not be stolen. The question was then carried to the State Supreme Court where a reversal was won by Assistant States Attorney Robert Wright.

It is expected that the State's victory in the Menagas case will have a widespread effect in preventing crimes of this type.

"You are to proceed alone, senior," announced their leader. "It is not well we should be seen, yet be assured we will be watching—and our horses are much faster than yours. You have only to follow the barranca to reach your goal."

The sun was almost setting when he came into full view of the hacienda. He could have made a short-cut across a stubble field, but he chose to stick close to the barranca until he should come upon the rope bridge. There was no need to pause to examine it since he had often crossed the same sort of thing before. Swerving he rode straight for the eastern gate, confident his bedraggled appearance together with that of his scarecrow of a horse would protect him better than subterfuge. He was right and a few minutes later was being admitted by Van Suttart and Arnaldo since Joyce, recognizing his stocky figure while it was still afar, had decided to receive him at her leisure and against her own background.

"You're Mr. Blackadder, aren't you?" said Dirk.

"Yes," said Blackadder, dismounting heavily. "How did you know?"

"I'm from the American embassy," said Dirk. "My name is Van Suttart and this is Adan Arnaldo who happened to witness your capture. I congratulate you on your escape."

"Huh?" grunted Blackadder. "Oh, yes. What about Joyce Sewell? She's here, isn't she?"

"I'll take you to her," said Dirk, "but she thought you'd be glad of a chance for a shave and a wash first."

"I haven't a razor," grumbled Blackadder, "and nothing to change into."

"I can lend you a razor," said Dirk; "as for linen, you're too big for me, but we can fix that too if you'll put up with stuff from the hacienda store. Come along."

He led him to a room near his own, showed him the bath, provided him with shaving equipment and promised to send up an assortment of shirts and underwear from the store. Scarcity of windows insured any Spanish habitation against curiosity on the part of the outer world but knocks the props from under individual privacy. Since every apartment depends for light and ventilation on high doors opening on a central patio the price of seclusion is apt to be darkness and suffocation. On the way to do his errand Dirk saw Joyce standing expectantly in her boudoir-office-sitting room and pretended not to see her—the sort of thing he had been doing for two long days and longer nights. On his way back she intercepted him.

"Dirk, come in here, please."

"What for?" he asked blankly, then remembered he was supposed to be a diplomat. "Forgive me. Of course I'll come in."

"Quit being polite!" said Joyce sharply. "I hate it. It isn't you and you've been doing it for two days. It's spoiled our rides. It's made me unhappy. For a while you were Dirk Van Suttart, a lovable human being. But now what are you? A shell, varnish, floor wax, veneer! I dislike you."

"That goes for me," said Dirk hotly. "I dislike actresses who change their leading men but always use the same old stage set."

"So that's it," said Joyce, "that's really it! I couldn't believe it. Half my mind told me that was the matter but the other half called the first half a fool. Why shouldn't I have taken Adan to the roof? Why? What conceivable reason?"

"You're asking me what business it was of mine," said Dirk dully, "and I'll answer you. None—none at all. What it did, though, was to wake me up. I felt miserable. I thought it would pass by morning, but it didn't." He looked up at her. "I—I hate feeling miserable."

"Oh, Dirk—poor Dirk! If you could only know what happened! He covered his nose and mouth with a silk handkerchief."

"Why?" demanded Dirk, bewildered. "What for?"

"On account of the night air."

They looked at each other and their eyes began to dance. Another second and they would have burst into laughter, but unfortunately Dirk's thoughts veered into another channel. There was something he had been wanting to do for his own personal satisfaction for what already seemed a long time and while her attention was still diverted he took her chin in his left hand and studied the tip of her nose as if it had a smudge. Her startled and puzzled eyes should have warned him but somehow her half parted lips seemed more important. He leaned over quickly but kissed them slowly.

Joyce had not imagined she would mind being kissed by Dirk, yet the light in her eyes dimmed and went out. Instead of warming she turned cold—so cold he released her and stood back. A sense of loss oppressed her. What had happened? Suddenly she knew. He had been selfish, casual. It wasn't only that she had been taken for granted; it went deeper—so much deeper. He had destroyed something they both should have guarded.

"Dirk," she said, "some day you'll grow up and learn how foolish it is to cheapen another person. I believe people can make beauty for themselves, not out of whole cloth perhaps, but when they have a fair start. Friends are what you make them. Love is what you make it. Just now I think you yourself are too small to know what I'm talking about."

He threw up his head rebelliously and made an impulsive forward movement, but something in her steady eyes stopped him in time. He turned and walked blindly toward his room.

CHAPTER XIII

Blackadder recoiled from his first glance in a mirror in five days. He felt grateful to that young Van Suttart for saving him from showing himself to Joyce looking like a tramp. Being a stickler for daily shaving he hadn't seen his beard in years and was shocked to find it spotted with gray. He took joy in getting rid of it, in steaming in a hot bath and in slipping into underwear and shirt, coarse but clean, supplied from the hacienda store. In spite of his wrinkled suit he felt in better humor than at any moment since his departure from Elsinboro. Joyce was a fool, he reflected complacently. What a chance she had missed by giving him this opportunity for recuperation! In his mind he credited her with tactical error number one.

But the moment he was shown into her presence he wondered if and where he had gone wrong. Already dressed in one of her flowered frocks, she turned in the chair at her desk but did not rise. She looked unbelievably cool—cool inside and out—as she passed slow eyes over his face and figure. Here was a man out of her past, accurately remembered, and he had not changed; yet he was distant, divided from her by a world. As for Blackadder, he beheld a person he did not know, a person he felt he might never know. He had been thinking of her as a young girl—headstrong, violent in her reactions, but young, unformed and consequently malleable. Now he stared at something as fixed as a portrait; alive yet baffling, impenetrable. Instantly his own plan of attack went into reverse with an almost audible stripping of mental gears and as an added humiliation he discovered he would have to speak first or not at all.

"Hardly what you'd call a warm welcome, Joyce."

"No," she admitted; then continued in an even tone, "Why have you come and what do you want?"

He was at a loss for an answer. That a whipper-snapper should outface him roused his always unmanageable temper and abandoning the sensible course he had just determined upon he foolishly reverted to a prepared speech—prepared and rehearsed for days.

"You know why I'm here. You're a willful and ungrateful girl. You bit the hand that fed you—fed you for years. Your escapade has cost me time and money and caused real anguish to Irma, as fine a woman as ever drew breath. But now it's a lot more serious. You're like a child playing with matches around a keg of powder and thinking it's funny! Get this, Joyce: if you don't go back with me at once you may find yourself responsible, silly as it may sound, for thousands of deaths. Fortunately you're still a minor. Do you hear? A minor."

"Yes, yes," said Joyce quietly, "you don't have to shout. I heard you—a minor. Well, what of it?"

"Your stepmother has appointed me your guardian and by the laws of the state of New York—" He stopped, halted by a clear laugh.

"Excuse me," said Joyce, controlling herself, "but that sounded so funny. The state of New York, Elsinboro, you, my stepmother—it's all thousands of miles and a hundred years away. There you were Mr. Blackadder, weren't you? Mr. Helm Blackadder, and a power in a small way. Well, here you're nothing. Unless you find some work to do around the place you haven't the right to eat, breathe, sleep or live."

"You talk to me like that," exploded Blackadder, "a man twice your age who—"

"Please don't shout," interrupted Joyce. "Try to realize it's only because I hate bloodshed that you weren't shot. That's easy enough to understand, but what about this? If you had been it wouldn't have affected the course of my present life in the slightest—it wouldn't even have rated an added inconvenience."

"Are you crazy?" gasped Blackadder.

"Perhaps," said Joyce, "but that isn't what matters, is it? What stands for a whole lot more than you seem able to comprehend is that I'm mistress of La Barranca."

"Anything I can do to help, Joyce?" asked Dirk, sauntering in from the balcony.

"Oh, Dirk; I'm glad you came. Do you mind showing Mr. Blackadder around for a while? I'm going to be busy until dinner time."

Blackadder, though annoyed at the interruption, promptly saw the value of a chance to sound out Van Suttart. Whose ally would he turn out to be? What was he doing here anyway? How had he got here and when? He accompanied him with alacrity, glad of a chance besides to reassemble his shaken wits, and to all his questions except the first and most important obtained ready answers. At the end of half an hour he could murmur: "So that cable of mine is really all the authority you have for being away from your post?"

"Why, yes, I guess so, yes," said Dirk, a little troubled by the tone of the statement. "I hadn't thought of it in exactly that way."

"Now that you have and that I'm here," continued Blackadder, "it sort of does away with any reason for you to continue hanging around, doesn't it?"

"Eh?" said Dirk, beginning to wake up; then he laughed. "Well, there's certainly an answer to that! The only method of departure at present happens to be ride or walk a hundred miles."

"Not necessarily," said Blackadder. "I have reason to think my driver may come to his senses and return; there's also the possibility he may have reported to the ambassador. Say I manage to get a car. Would you be inclined to help me persuade Miss Sewell to leave at once?"

"I'm not sure," said Dirk, frowning thoughtfully. "I'd have to talk to her about it first."

"That's an extraordinary stand for you to take."

"Why?"

"If you can't see it," said Blackadder, "I won't try to show you. For your own good I might point out again that your justification for absence from your post terminated with my arrival."

"I can't blame you for being puzzled, Mr. Blackadder," said Dirk slowly, "since I'm a bit that way myself. I don't know quite how it's come about but somehow I sort of don't seem to give a tinker's dam about my post."

Thousands of Ideas for Inventions, but Few Get Through Patent Office

Every minute of the day in these United States, thousands of persons are having productive brainstormings, bearing now ideas in the bathtub, or chewing pencil stubs as they struggle through the final phases of their "invention." Of the hundreds of thousands of ideas produced, few of them get through the patent office, but this lot, relatively small as it is, appears large enough, judging from the rapidly filling shelves in the patent room of the Chicago public library, notes a writer in the Chicago Daily News.

Here every month are added anywhere from sixteen to twenty-one heavy volumes describing the patents issued by the United States for the last month. Each patent is numbered and described in the inventor's application by drawing and text. The idea of the patent record is to give anyone who wishes a peek at the workings of any patent that catches his fancy or upon which he might want to improve. (Patented articles usually bear the number of the license.)

Blackadder snorted, stared at him, then turned away with a shrug. Here certainly was no ally and he dismissed him from mind. But not for long. At dinner, where Blackadder sat in brooding silence, Dirk was the mainspring that kept the ball of conversation rolling. He egged Don Jorge and Arnaldo into one of their perverid political discussions, then bargained with the latter to alternate with him at playing a dance tune, Adan to go first. The challenge accepted, Dirk fairly forced Joyce to dance, but when it came his turn it developed he scarcely knew one note from another.

Joyce had been puzzled by his high spirits, in violent contrast to the gloom which had enshrouded him from the moment of the rebuke she had administered. It wasn't the kiss she had minded nor its rough-and-ready manner, not even its humiliating assumption. The truth was she had been hurt rather than angry and had spoken straight from the heart in protest against a blow struck at some vague beauty, still in the bud yet present to them both. But no sooner did he slip his arm around her to dance than his strategy throughout dinner became evident.

"This is the only way I could think of," he whispered, "to be alone with you. To tell you I'm sorry—sorrider than I ever was about anything else in my life. You were quite right to say what you did. Please don't stay away from me. Please give me a chance. Please go for a ride tomorrow as though nothing had happened."

"Will you promise on your word of honor—your given word I believe you called it—never to do it again?"

"No," he said after some deliberation, "I can't honestly promise any such thing. I'm through with giving my word. All I can say is I'll do my best—my level best."

It was all Joyce could do to keep from laughing and what stopped her, strangely enough, was his sincerity—the very thing that made him comical. They rode the next morning; to Blackadder's disgust they were gone for hours. After their return came lunch and the inevitable siesta. Even then Blackadder got no chance for a further talk with Joyce, for she was busy with the myriad details tossed up as steadily as a playing fountain by a family of 500 souls. How long was this sort of thing to keep up? He could imagine himself hanging around for days without ever securing five minutes free of interruption. The dinner was an exact replica of that of the night before except that his surly abstraction was more profound—so dense it gradually spread its wet blanket over everybody else. At last Joyce surrendered, crushed into submission by a prolonged silence.

"I'm afraid you're having a miserable time, Mr. Blackadder. What can we do to cheer you up?"

Helm raised somber eyes to her face. "You know the answer to that, Joyce," he said with overwhelming simplicity. "All I ask from these gentlemen and yourself is an hour's uninterrupted talk with you."

Joyce knew when she was fairly caught. "I'm sure that can be arranged any time you like," she said, making the best of it. "Shall we say in my sitting room in half an hour?"

"Splendid," said Blackadder, and promptly turned affable.

To the amazement of everyone, though he had appeared deaf to such talk as there had been, he took up a discussion where Don Jorge and Arnaldo had left off, enumerated the omissions made by each and arrived at an unanswerable conclusion astonishing to both.

HOW to SEW

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

AN OLD house sitting in the midst of old fields against a background of piney woods not so far from where the Pilgrims landed. The present occupant is just as interested in handwork and just as thrifty as all of her New England ancestors who have preceded her there. She still makes braided rag rugs from discarded garments and they harmonize perfectly with her lovely old furniture. One that she showed me was different than any I had ever seen. Here are all the dimensions and method of making it in case it is new to you, too, and you would like to make one like it.

The center oval part is 32 inches long and 16 inches wide with 6-inch scroll border all around. The scrolls are made in pairs from braided strips 2 3/4 yards long. These strips are braided tight so they are not more than 1/2 inch wide. The center of each strip is marked as shown here at A and the ends are then sewn around and around, working toward the center as at B. The pairs of scrolls are sewn together and also to the edge of the rug as indicated here at the lower right.

This kind of rug has infinite possibilities for color schemes. One seen had a blue center, a band of mixed color and then a wide band of red. The pairs of scrolls alternated red and blue.

TIPS to Gardeners

The First Step

THE first step toward a successful garden is an early start. Spade or plow as soon as possible. If a handful of soil gripped firmly can be crumbled readily upon release, the soil is in condition to be worked.

It is important that fertilizer be used cautiously, advises Harold Coulter, vegetable expert of the Ferry Seed Institute. An excess is often harmful, particularly in growing fruits, such as tomatoes, cucumbers and peppers.

Garden preparation effort is wasted if you do not plant seeds from dependable sources. Select your favorite varieties from the nearby store before the supply is depleted, even though it is not yet time to plant. Make sure the seeds you buy are freshly packed.

Weather conditions permitting, it is advisable to spade into the soil some rotted manure, rotted leaves or lawn clippings, or rotted garden refuse. Clay soils are improved in texture by this treatment, and sandy soils are improved in water holding capacity.

DOAN'S PILLS

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted

by William Bruckart

National Press Building

Washington, D. C.

Washington.—A good many persons in Washington still are arguing the point whether President Roosevelt and Secretary Roper, of the Department of Commerce, made a mistake in arranging for the so-called conference of nearly a thousand "small" business men. The conference that turned into a near riot provided plenty of publicity, if that was what was planned, but it was publicity of a distinctly bad sort from a political standpoint. On the other hand, some way, some how, there came out of that conference a score or more of recommendations, and some of them were the very "recommendations" which Mr. Roosevelt wanted from "business interests." It is a new vehicle on which bureaucrats and advisers can ride.

But before I attempt an analysis of the results that may flow from the conference, a review of the meeting itself should be recorded. The business men, widely publicized as being "small and independent fellows" were convened in the Commerce Department auditorium. It had all of the earmarks of a session for which a program had been drawn up here in Washington. It appeared to be cut and dried. No sooner had the session convened, however, than things began to happen. Since there were nearly a thousand individuals, there were nearly one thousand different views, and the individuals sought in various ways to express themselves. The result of the first day's meetings can be described, therefore, as nil—unless you want to consider the riot, the necessity for physically ejecting some of the members who became violent in their objections, as a result. It was a session in which shouts were heard about "hand-picked chairman" and "log rolling" and "you can't dictate to me."

With the first day's session a flop, machinery somehow was set in motion for the second day so that a recurrence of the riot would be avoided. The conference was broken up into group or sectional meetings. It was hinted that big things could be expected from these in the shape of concrete recommendations. Well, we observers found instead that the big conference-riot of the little business men had been broken up into some ten or twelve smaller conference-riots. Just as an example: one session was so uproarious that it was found necessary to call in the building police and forcibly throw out one little business man who measured over six feet and weighed plenty.

Those were the physical phases of the two-day conference. Yet, believe it or not, there were "recommendations" made by those nearly one thousand business men representing small businesses of the country. They were duly presented to President Roosevelt who sent out word to the newspaper correspondents afterward that some of those recommendations were, indeed, quite constructive.

I shall not attempt to set them down here. They would take more space than is available. I noted among them, however, one item that urged the government to "establish a procedure to encourage and facilitate loans to small business." It recalled to me that there has been much talk among "advanced thinkers" in the administration that the government should have an agency to make loans to small businesses. It was discussed in these columns recently. Undoubtedly, it was just a coincidence that this "recommendation" should come from the small business men while the advisers to the President were considering it.

Included in the recommendations, however, were proposals for the administration to do several things that thus far have not had administration backing. One of these was a recommendation that wage and hour regulatory legislation should be abandoned. No one seems to know from whence that item came; and it was variously reported as not having had the "full support of the conference." It may have been that even the 12 chairmen who carried the recommendations to the White House meeting with the President performed a miracle—but there is no denying that the item was included and quite a few members of the Democratic party in congress were glad to see it.

So, the conference has been held and its work and efforts to solve the depression problems are spread on the first pages of newspapers. The results in this direction would seem to justify Mr. Roosevelt's recent intimations that the business men do not know what they want. Such a view would be correct if the conference itself had been representative. True, the delegates came from all sections of the country. True, all excepting a very few were of the type known as small business men. But it must not be overlooked that the conference was planned, invitations extended and program written from Washington. I think it is quite unlikely that men would be invited without somebody in the administration having knowledge of their general attitude toward the New Deal. There actually may be something to the charge that was variously hurled in the sessions that chairmen were hand-picked and that there was a bit of log rolling done, just a teeny, weeny bit of it.

Concerning the after-effects, one can hear many observations. Some say that the bulk of the small business men went away from Washington nursing a grudge; others add that many of the delegates went back home with a sour idea of government conferences and, therefore, with a willingness to ridicule the administration, and still others hold the conviction that the very confusion that came from the meeting provided Mr. Roosevelt with the horrible example that he wants in his criticism of business leadership. It seems to me there is ground for each of these three conclusions. Time, alone, will disclose the ultimate effects. Mr. Roosevelt may utilize the recommendations in a fireside chat or a message to congress. Some of his advisers may bear down on the lack of agreement and understanding among business men. Or, the whole thing may be treated very seriously and an attempt made to convince the country that the administration is being guided by what it believes the business interests want—as shown in the recommendations of the conference.

The Treasury laid some stress on announcement the other day that it will begin a series of borrowings late this month that likely will be the last borrowings by the federal government "in this generation."

It was stated that between 200 and 300 millions will be borrowed during the next several months, but that June tax payments and subsequent collections will provide money for current needs. That is to say there will be no need for "new money" which is money borrowed out of the money market or banks.

It has not been made clear how the Treasury will accomplish the objective of cessation of borrowing at this time. President Roosevelt has predicted that there will be a deficit of about one billion dollars in the next fiscal year. A Treasury deficit can mean only one thing, namely, that the amount of income is less than the amount of the expenditures. Something appears to be screwy in a circumstance where there is a deficit of a billion and only a few hundred millions have to be borrowed.

However it may be accomplished, it is hopeful to think that borrowings are going to be terminated. The Treasury has been doing it for a long, long time. I think it is about nine years that the Treasury has faced a deficit each year and there has been new money borrowed to pay the bills. Those borrowings ranged anywhere from half a billion during 1930 to more than four billions in 1933 and 1934.

The Treasury's announcement explained that the Treasury would receive more than one billion dollars for the account of its trust funds during this year. Trust funds are segregated moneys, such as the fund for payment of social security benefits. Well, it strikes me as a bit unfair to say the Treasury will not borrow any new money this year when it actually is borrowing from the social security fund. There is no violation of law in that course, because the law says the social security funds must be invested in government bonds.

The borrowing from social security funds calls attention to another phase of government finance. Those funds come from payroll taxes. They are taxes paid by the workers as well as by the employer. It has occurred to me, therefore, that unless the government's revenue can be made to balance its expenditures, sometime in the future workers will want to obtain payment under the provisions and there will be nothing but government bonds in the fund. Further, there is every possibility—indeed, I believe it is a probability—that these payroll taxes are going to bear more heavily on the workers of the future than they do today.

There seems little doubt that the social security dream is here to stay. Unworkable as it is, there will be no politician with sufficient courage ever to tell the voters of his constituency that the social security act will fail. Some of the "advanced thinkers" among the New Dealers have had spasms when remarks like that were made in their presence. The real spasms, however, will develop when the public is given a clear understanding of what that law does to a civilization—when it is shown by operation that the ideal of protection takes much more out of the pockets of those who are supposed to benefit than they ever can get back.

CHOOSING COMPANIONS IN SERVICE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 3:7-19, 31-35.
GOLDEN TEXT—For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother—Mark 3:35.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Twelve Men Who Went With Jesus.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Twelve Men Who Went With Jesus.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Working With Others for Christ.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Comradeship in Christian Service.

"God can save a man who is all alone on the top of the Alps." So spoke one who sought to discourage another who wanted to give his life for Christian service. No one questions that God could thus carry on His work in sovereign power, and that there are times when He does that very thing. But ordinarily God works through men. It was "the sword of the Lord, and of Gideon" (Judges 7:18).

What a glorious, inspiring truth it is that God calls men into companionship with Him for service. Sinful and weak though they be they may become strong and holy, and do valiant service for Him.

I. The Need of Christian Workers (vv. 7-11).

Although the hostility to Christ was growing apace among the religious leaders, the people thronged about Him in the hope they might have deliverance from the devil and from disease. The need was so great that the Lord Jesus now prepared to call those who were to be His fellow-servants.

The multitudes are in just as desperate need of Christ and of the ministry of His church today. Why, then, do they not crowd the churches and press in around His servants? That is the question over which leaders of the church are puzzled. There may be many reasons, but we suggest two as being at least worthy of careful thought. The first is that we live in a time of apostasy. In the time of Christ men had only begun to hear His message of deliverance. In our day men have heard and heard again and have hardened their hearts.

Another reason is that in many, perhaps most, instances, the church has so far separated itself from the Lord that it has no power. Needy men are not interested in the dead observance of religious forms. They want to see the workings of the power of the Most High God!

Whether men know their need or not, whether they throng our churches or not, their very need of Christ should impel us to serve the Master in reaching them. The love of Christ should constrain us.

II. The Call to Christian Work (vv. 12-19).

Much might be said at this point but we must limit ourselves to two thoughts. Note that the Lord chooses his own workers; we do not choose to work for Him. Then be encouraged by the fact that He chooses men of widely differing gifts, temperaments, and personal characteristics.

Then we note that He called some of unusual ability, others with little ability; some learned, and some unlearned—fishermen, a tax-gatherer, and others of various occupations. Note that none were by profession preachers. What a comfort it is to those who are in Christian work to remember that it is not what we are or may have been that counts; it is what Christ is and what He can do through us!

III. Preparation for Christian Work (vv. 31-35).

God has many ways to prepare His servants—but it seems that they all experience the heart-breaking disappointment of misunderstanding and the heart-warming joy of intimate fellowship with the Lord.

Look at verse 21 and you will realize that the family and friends of Jesus thought He was crazy because He devoted Himself so wholeheartedly to the service of His Father. Is it not strange that if a man becomes a scientist he is honored if he ruins his health in zealous research? If he is a business man he may burn the lights late in the pursuit of wealth, but if he chooses to give his life to the greatest of all occupations open to man—service for Christ—his friends and relatives try to deter him by calling him a fanatic.

Beautiful beyond words is the other side of our picture. Those who serve Him are "to be with Him" (v. 14). He sends them forth to preach, and gives them power. Yes, they even become the members of the most intimate family circle. "Behold . . . my brethren" (v. 34).

Vain Regrets and Grief
Forgive!—the years are slipping by, and Life is all too brief—A time will come when it's too late for vain regrets and grief.

Come Apart and Rest!
Even the busiest lives must have their breathing times, when the ordinary strain of effort is relaxed.

Unconscious Benefaction
It may well be that the good we unconsciously do exceeds the sum of all our purposed benefactions.

Can Spring Be Far Away?

WITH Winter almost over, March blizzards to the contrary notwithstanding, you find yourself eyeing the fashion sheets a little more than casually. Indeed you probably already have your needle threaded, just waiting for some nice Spring patterns to make your acquaintance. And here they are.

Fitted Bodice.
Look your Sunday best in this graceful afternoon frock with its snug and softly shirred waistline. The skirt flares slightly to the front and emphasizes the slimmness of the silhouette. Note the saddle shoulder and short, puffed sleeves—details that are unusually becoming and make for distinction. One of the new widely spaced flower patterns in rayon or silk will make your informal afternoons and evening a double delight, and the pattern is a particular joy to work with. So simple, and so pleasing.

Trim Morning Frock.
Don't be caught around the house without your best foot forward. You needn't be, with this crisp and flattering morning frock at your beck and call. Simple as pie, yet charming fresh and youthful, this model dispenses with all fussy details yet achieves an appearance which will see you through the busiest day. The skirt flares a bit from a neatly fitted waistline, and the ric-rac trim, in contrast, adds a note of brightness. Just nine pieces including the belt and pockets. Try dotted swiss or a printed percale.

For the Full Figure.
This charming frock is really more than a house frock—you'll find it flattering enough and dressy enough to wear throughout the day. The slim, straight lines make every provision for comfort. The skirt has a kick pleat at front, the sleeves are full and pleated, and the neck line is just right to be very flattering. Furthermore you can make this dress, of a rayon print or gay percale, in a brief afternoon or evening, resulting in a pretty, runaround model at far less than you usually spend.

Favorite Recipe of the Week

For Washington's Birthday.

FEBRUARY 22 would not be completely celebrated if cherries were not featured in some way during the day. It is true that the story of the cherry tree and George Washington is more closely connected in the memory of many of us than his great prowess as the Father of our Country. We seem to take for granted his ability as a leader and talk about the cherry tree episode of his youth.

This recipe for cherry pie is made to use the entire contents of a No. 2 can of cherries, which holds 2 1/2 cupsful.

Cherry Pie.

1 No. 2 can Pitted 2 tablespoons corn-
Red Sour Cherries starch
6 tablespoons sugar 1/4 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon butter

Line an 8-inch pie pan with pastry. Drain the cherries from the juice and place them in the pastry shell. Mix together sugar, cornstarch and salt and sprinkle over the cherries. Pour on the juice; dot with butter and cover with a thin top crust or with strips of pastry. Bake in a hot oven (475 degrees) for 12 minutes; reduce temperature to 425 degrees and continue baking for 45 minutes.

How Squirrels Store Nuts
The fox squirrel, like the gray, stores nuts for winter in hundreds of thousands of pockets, under leaves or in the ground, usually one nut at a time. Red squirrels do not do this. They are cone eaters. They take the seeds out of pine cones anywhere in the north country. Where there are no spruce or pine trees, there are few red squirrels.

C. WIRTH OUT FOR OFFICE OF ASSEMBLYMAN

County Treasurer Conrad J. Wirth announced this week that he will file as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for state Assemblyman.

Wirth has been active in politics for about twenty years. His first service was in the state assembly, where he acted as page boy from 1915 to 1917. He served for 15 years as an engineer in the State Highway department, until his election as county treasurer, in 1934, an office which expires this year, and to which he cannot succeed himself.

First mention that he would enter the assemblyman race was made Wednesday evening at a Democratic rally. He said he had the support of the county Democratic central committee in his race.

Trade among Friends

No matter what some folks say to the contrary, there certainly is a lot of sentiment in business. Friendship, for instance, makes more satisfactory sales than all the cleverness and argument in the world.

You like to trade at a certain store—not because its counters are arranged in a scientific way, but because the folks who serve you are always friendly and helpful.

Just that very thing—FRIENDLY SERVICE—is the power that draws people together into communities like this, where everybody can enjoy the many benefits of neighborly cooperation.

And FRIENDLY SERVICE is the sentimental reason why you find it very much to your advantage to trade with our advertisers—to buy where you feel at home, where your friends will see that you are well satisfied.
